STORIES OF WHITELAW REID AND WILLIAM WALTER PHELPS.

The Legations at Constantinople and Peking-Our Consul General at Cairo and His Kavass-The Corean Minister and His Soldiers.

Washington, March 6.-Secretary Sherman tells me that the applications for conulships will probably number 5,000. There are more than ten applicants for every foreign mission, and the politicians seem to look upon the diplomatic appointments as the best offices in the gift of the administration. This is a great mistake. I have at different times visited every legation in Europe and Asia, and have come into contact with more than 100 American consuls all parts of the world. The most of them were dissatisfied with their positions, and all complained of big expenses and small salaries. There is scarcely an office re is scarcely an office state department which pays enough to allow its occupant to live up to his station and entertain as he should. One of the chief reasons for sending rich men to the courts of London, Paris, Berlin and St. Petersburg is be-Petersburg is be-cause by means of their private fortunes they can keep up the style which the American minister f. G. CARPENTER should maintain in in the gift of the order to be of value at these courts. These order to be of value at these courts. These ministers get the highest salaries paid to any of our diplomats. They receive $17.500 a year each. Their expenses, however, are often twice or thrice this amount. Whitelaw Reid, it is said, paid $27.000 a year house rent while he was minister to Paris, and his entertainments must have cost him as much more. Our present minister to France. Mr. Eustis, pays $12.000 a year for his house, and his necessary expenses, as given in an itemized statement not long ago, were $27.000 a year. I visited Paris when Levi P. Morton was our minister there. He paid more than twice his salary to keep up his establishment. Governor Noyes, of Ohio, when he was minister to France was too poor to maintain the dignity of the place out of his own pocket. He was helped by having a rich secretary of legation. This was Representative Hitt, of Illinois, who spent, I have been told, as much as $30,000 a year in entertaining.

The Berlin Mission. Another costly foreign place is Berlin Another costly foreign place is Berlin. Our minister there ought to keep up an equal style with the ministers from other countries. He cannot do so on much less than $40,000 a year. The British minister at Berlin gets $37,500 a year, and has a palace furnished by his government and a big allowance for entertaming. The British legation building at Paris is five times as big as that of the British legation at Washington, and England's German minister gets $45,000 a year and $100,000 additional for entertaining. Our last minister to Berlin is, I am told, worth $20,000 less to-day that he was when Cleveland appointed him ambassador to Germany. It is said that he failed in some of his diplomatic negotiations from a lack of money for entertaining, and that his necessities at one time were such that he seriously thought of sending in his resignation. I visited William Walter Phelps a few years ago, when he was our minister to Germany. He was, you know, a man of large fortune, and he spent money freely. When he got to Berlin he could find no house suitable for the American legation. An independent establishment costs a great deal in that city. Many of the fashionable people live in flats, and only the richest can afford houses. There were few houses for rent in the diplomatic locality. Mr. Phelps picked out the building he wanted and then sent his agents to buy out the tenants. He ousted the storekeepers from the ground floor. He bought up the leases of the fashionable people who Our minister there ought to keep up an out the tenants. He obsted the storeacepers from the ground floor. He bought up the leases of the fashionable people who were living above, and then having released the whole building, he turned an army of carpenters and masons into it and had it remodeled to suit himself. His home was perhaps the finest any American foreign minister has ever had. It consists a more other rooms sight large parallel. home was perhaps the finest any American foreign minister has ever had. It contained among other rooms eight large parlors, which could be thrown into one, and it was so large that Minister Phelps could have entertained the whole of the German court had he wished to do so. Still his services to the United States were such that our government could have well afforded to have allowed him enough money for several such houses. His entertainments brought him into the closest relations with the Germans. He was popular with both Bismarck and the young emperor, and when he tried to get anything done for America he succeeded. Another efficient minister was Oscar Straus, who represented us at Constantinople during Cleveland's first administration. Mr. Straus spent at least $20,000 a year more than his salary. He had the closest relations with the sultan and his court, and he was able to settle any trouble concerning America to our advantage in very short order.

How Our Ministers Live.

How Our Ministers Live.

Few people have any idea of the expenses of our ministers. Those who are sent to the Orient require a large number of servants. The minister to Japan has coachmen who are dressed in Japanese livery and who wear hats like butter bowls turned upside down. The minister to Peking has two men who do nothing eise but watch at the gates of the legation grounds to let the visitors in and out. His coachman is a swell Chinaman, who wears bright colored silk dresses. When a minister goes out to ride on horseback a gorgeous groom follows behind. While I was in Calcutta I met the American consul general. He was a plain Oregon man, who, I venture, had never had more than two servants at home. In India he had to keep twenty. When he went out to drive there were two coachmen with turbans and gowns on the front of his carriage, and two other turbaned Hindoos standing on the footboard behind. In Oriental countries our ministers usually have servants go ahead of them as they walk through the city to clear the streets. In Constantinople and Cairo the man who procedes the minister is known as the kavass. The kavass has a sword, enormous pistols and sometimes also a staff with a silver head.

He is dressed with much gold braid and liver head. He is dressed with much gold braid and wears a fex cap. During my stay in Egypt I had an interview with the khedive. At this time a kavass went with the consul general and myself to the palace. When I accompanied the American consul to call upon the patriarch of Jerusalem we had two kavasses in front of us. Each man carried a club as tall as himself, upon the top of which was a ball of silver as big as your fist. As we waiked through the narrow streets of Jerusalem these swells dropped their heavy sticks on the stone pavement as they walked in front, and cleared the way for us. Our minister to Corea has a company of soldiers from the king who act as his special body guard. They are dreesed in plum colored zouave pantaloons, short blouses, belted in at the waist, and hats of black horsehalr, which are tied on by ribbons fastened under the chin. During my stay in Seoul I had an interview with the king. At this time the soldiers went in front and cleared the way for me. The present American minister to Corea was first presented to the king on that day, and we went together, the king sending down a number of his own servants to accompany us to the palace. Our consuls in China have each a man called the Ting-chi to go in front of them when they go out to make visits of state. Such a man went in front of me when I called upon Li Hung Chang. He was dressed in bright colored silk and had on a pair of black cloth boots with soles an inch thick. Upon his head there was a hat which looked like an inverted spittoon, and there was a bla button on its crown to show that he was a man of rank. wears a fez cap. During my stay in Egypt I had an interview with the khedive. At

Court Dress Troubles.

Style means a great deal in foreign courts, and our ministers would be much better off if they could wear a uniform instead of being required to appear, as is the rule of the state department, in the ordinary dress of an American citizen. Our usual evening dress is, you know, just the same as that of the waiters, and our ministers have, in fact, been taken for the waiters at some great diplomatic receptions. When Lambert Tree was minister to Beigium he attended such a reception. He was standing holding a cup of coffee in his hand, waiting for it to cool, when an attache of one of the other legations wearing a bushel of gold lace and a peck of brass buttons seized the cup out of his hand and carried it away before Mr. Tree knew what he was about. The man took him for a waiter. The other diplomats upon such occasions are clad in uniforms embroidered with gold lace. They wear swords and medals, and many of them have slik belts and sashes. If an American minister has been an officer of the army he usually wears a military uniform, and if not he tries to get over the regulation in some other way. James Buchanan compromised on a black suit, a white vest and a black handled sword. Our first minister to China, John Ward, adopted the costume of a captain of the Georgia militia. He had been elected captain of a little company known as the Chatham artillery, and the uniform which he had made for himself as captain had brass buttons marked C. A. When he was at the Chinese court one of the almond-eyed silk-gowned noblemen asked him what the letters C. A. stood for. Mr. Ward replied that they were made in honor of the friendship of China and America, and that in order to give the greater honor to China its initial C had been placed in front of that of America. This seemed to delight the Chinaman, General Lew Wallace wore his military uniform while he was minister to Turkey. It was his uniform that first attracted the attention of the sultan. The first Friday after General Wallace arrived in Constantinople he went to the building opposite the mosque to see his majesty as he went to prayers. As the sultan came out of the mosque he looked over at the party of foreigners about General Wallace, and asked who the fine looking man in the uniform might be. He was told it was the new American minister, and he thereupon raised his saliow hand to his red fez cap and saluted the general. Shortly after this when General Wallace was presented the sultan referred to having seen him, and the two became strong friends. General Wallace, spent much time at the sultan's palace, and among the other mementoes which he brought back from Turkey is a very fine pencil sketch of his majesty, which the general drew while his majesty posed.

Knee Breeches for Ministers.

Knee Breeches for Ministers. Why should Secretary Sherman not inaugurate a new costume for our ministers? Mr. Sherman once appeared before Napo augurate a new costume for our ministers?

Mr. Sherman once appeared before Napoleon III. in knee breeches. He wore an evening suit, knee pants, black silk stockings and pumps, and he says in his book that it seemed very awkward at first until he saw that all the other parties at the reception were dressed as he was. Clifton R. Breckinridge, our present minister to St. Petersburg, appeared at the court of the czar with his shapely shins clad in silk stockings. Now in these days of bleycle suits there is no reason why some such dress might not be adopted "as the ordinary dress of the American citizen." It was so in the past. When John Adams was presented to King George III. he wore a coat embroidered with lace, his fat calves were clad in silk stockings and his shoes were ornamented with silver buckles. Benjamin Franklin, at his presentation to the king of France, wore a plain suit of black velvet, with black velvet knee breeches, white silk stockings and black shoes. He had intended to wear a wig, but when it arrived the hairdresser could not squeeze it upon Franklin's big head. The man worked and stretched and Franklin finally told him that the wig was not big enough, whereupon the French hairdresser angrily threw it upon the floor, saying: "Monsieur, that is impossible. It is not the wig which is too small; it is the head which is too large."

Some Queer Diplomatic Stories.

Some Queer Diplomatic Stories Most of our American ministers do good service. They labor under the greatest disadvantages, and have to compete with men who have spent their lives in the school of diplomacy. They have no money, and are under the shadow of probable removal at the end of four years. The method of their appointment is such that it is not strange that many inefficient men find their way to the head of our foreign legations, so that every now and then one of them does something which is a disgrace to the United States. I have heard of a number of such instances, and the stories of the adventures and mistakes of the American ministers abroad, could they be collected, would make a book more ridiculous than Artemus Ward's travels. One of the diplomats whom Cleveland sent to Italy lived, it is said, over a dairy stable and appeared at court in a frayed collar and a soiled shirt. I was told at Cairo how one of our former consuls general used to go to Ismail Pasha and whine about the poor salary his government gave him. He reminded the khedive that his majesty was rich, and asked him for ald out of the Egyptian treasury. The khedive gave this consul general money again and again, our government never knowing how much it was being disgraced. It is no excuse for this man to add that he was usually drunk at the times he made such requests. Most of our American ministers do good Ayres for years in a small room over the shop which he had rented as our legation. He gave no functions whatever, until at last the outery against his parsimony became so great that he rented a skating rink and sent out printed circulars asking the distinguished people of the Argentine Republic to come to an American entertainment. When the president, the diplomatic corps and the rest of Buenos Ayres swelldom arrived they found the American minister sitting on a platform with the stars and stripes festooned above him and a tiger's skin at his feet.

About him were thirty-eight women, dressed in all colors of the rainbow, to represent the thirty-eight states which our country then had. The minister did not rise to greet his guests. They wandered about the room to the music of a brass band, and walted in vain for the dancing to begin. There was nothing to eat and nothing to drink, and the occasion passed off as the social curlosity of the year. Another South American minister took rooms in an humble part of the capital at which he was stationed. He got an Indian woman to do his cooking for him and did his marketing himself. Shortly after he arrived he applied for a position for his daughter as a teacher in one of the schools, but the superintendent of education told him that public sentiment would not opprove of the employment of the daughter of a man of so high a rank for that purpose.

Some Other Shining Diplomats. I could tell a lot of queer stories about some of our ministers to the far East. How, for instance, one of Cleveland's ministers used to come in person to the front door of his legation to answer the bell. At such times he might possibly be in his shirt sieeves and without a coliar. This man was the laughing stock of the far East for a time, and his popularity at the court of the mikado was not increased by his letters, which were published in the American papers.

a time, and his popularity at the court of the mikado was not increased by his letters, which were published in the American papers.

In one of these he wrote that he was having a high old time among the Japanese, and informed the people of his town that it was the custom of the ladies of the empire to bathe in the streams without bathing suits, and that the sight of them was worth the journey to Japan. This man was one of Cleveland's worst mistakes. Speaking of him makes me think of another. I refer to Bayliss W. Hanna, who was appointed minister to the Argentine Republic. Shortly after arriving at Buenos Ayres he sent home a letter, which was published in the local newspapers, of which the following are extracts:

"This is a wonderful city of 300,000 souls, a revelation to me. There is more money here than in any place I ever saw, but just now they are having our greenback days over again, gold being worth 51½. It is the most extravagant government on earth. I will send you a paper containing a full account of my reception. Tell General Manson and A. F. Ramsey if I had them here I could make them very rich. My great trouble, however, is the language. I understand nobody and nobody understands me, so I simply make signs. It is a capital country—looks like Iowa. When I get settled I will write a letter giving a full acount of everything. Give my regards to all inquiring friends. Yours truly.

A letter of this kind would certainly be republished in Buenos Ayres. The Japanese by the next mail from America received the effusions of the minister about the ladies of their court, and you can imagine how much weight such expressions would give him among the people to whom he was sent as the representative of our friendly relations with them. Stories of this kind might be multiplied. They show, however, the necessity for great care in the selection of our diplomats. The question of consulships in quite as important, and you will see that Secretary Sherman has no slight matter before him in making the square political p
